

Data Retention Policy

Langate Group

Purpose

This policy outlines the requirements and controls/procedures Langate Group has implemented to manage the retention and deletion of customer data.

Policy

For Customers

Customer data is retained for as long as the account is in active status. Data enters an “expired” state when the account is voluntarily closed. Unless mandated otherwise by applicable laws (for example, HIPAA), expired account data will be retained for 30 days (or customized). After this period, the account and related data will be removed. Customers closing their accounts voluntarily should download their data manually or via the API before initiating the account closure process.

If a customer account is involuntarily suspended, then there is a 14-day (or customized) grace period during which the account will be inaccessible but can be reopened if the customer meets their payment obligations and resolves any terms of service violations.

If a customer wishes to back up their data from a suspended account manually, they must ensure that their account is brought back into good standing so that the user interface will be available for their use. After 14 days (or another specified period), the suspended account will be closed, and the data will enter the “expired” state. The data will then be permanently removed 30 days thereafter (or a different specified period) unless required by law to retain it.
